

Anhingidae the DARTERS

The Aninga is the only member of the Darter family found in the United States. Darters are primarily found in the tropics where they are widespread. They are migratory and are strong flyers, often seen soaring in groups high overhead. Darters regularly spread their wings to dry while they are perched. They get their common family name from their practice of darting about with their bill in search of prey while swimming through the water.