

(John Scavetto)

Sturnidae the STARLINGS

There are 122 species in the family Sturnidae distributed around the globe. One, the European Starling is found breeding in the United States. Starlings and their relatives, the mynas, are gregarious birds, with some species found in huge flocks. They are omnivores well adapted to living in both urban areas and open country.